SCC Playbook: The Coach’s Checklist

2019

by
Frank Wagner
Chris Coffey
Marshall Goldsmith
SCC Playbook: The Coach’s Checklist

Stakeholder Centered Coaching®

by
Frank Wagner
Chris Coffey
Marshall Goldsmith

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or by any information storage and retrieval system, without permission in writing from the authors.

© 2019 Frank Wagner, Chris Coffey & Marshall Goldsmith
Preface

This Guide is based upon years of experience working with successful leaders who were willing to do what it takes to becoming even better leaders in their future. Marshall Goldsmith developed the underlying concepts, philosophy and methods found in this guide while working with exceptional leaders who had risen to the most senior levels in major corporations. Without question, anyone who follows the process laid out in this guide will improve in his or her leadership, be able to sustain it, and others will recognize it. Also, this guide is not for everyone. Ask yourself if any of the following conditions exist for the person you are coaching:

- Lack of Commitment – This leader is not willing to make a sincere effort to change. What is described here will work only if the person is willing to implement the disciplined process described in this guide.

- Wrong Background – If the person lacks the intelligence, experience, or functional skills to do your current job, don't expect the material in this guide to help. The focus here is on improving leadership behavior.

- Written-off – The leader has been written-off by the company. If that is the case, don't bother going through this process in an attempt to save this person’s job. It may, however, help a great deal for this person’s next job.

- Wrong Mission – What is described on these pages is a “how to get there” process, not a “where to go” process. If this leader has the wrong focus and is heading in the wrong direction, this guide is not what will help gain the knowledge or cognitive skills required.

- Ethics Problem – If this person has an ethical or integrity issues, what we will teach here will not help. This guide is only about improving behavior, not ethics or beliefs.

If none of these conditions exist, what is found in this guide will be of real value. It is written in simple, short sections. Each section deals with what to do. Equally important, each section deals with what “not” to do.
TABLE OF CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION .................................................................................................................. 1
  What Makes the Process Unique .................................................................................. 3
  Beliefs of Successful People ....................................................................................... 6
  Principles Underlying the Process ............................................................................. 13
  7-Step Involving Stakeholders Process ................................................................... 17
  What a Leader Needs to Succeed .............................................................................. 21
  The Behavioral Coaching Skills ............................................................................... 24
  The Coaching Flow ..................................................................................................... 31
  Stakeholder Centered Coaching® Definitions ............................................................. 35

PHASE ONE: START SMART .......................................................................................... 39
  Step 1: Contracting for Coaching .............................................................................. 40
    Sample Coaching Contract ....................................................................................... 43
    Do’s & Don’ts for Involving Stakeholders ............................................................... 47
    Follow-Up and Effectiveness Research .................................................................. 48
  Step 2: Selecting Behavior(s) to Develop ................................................................. 51
    Marshall’s 20 Habits from “What Got You Here Won’t”… .................................... 52
    360° Approaches .................................................................................................... 54
    Coaching during 360° Review ................................................................................. 63
    If the Leader is Struggling Exercise ...................................................................... 66
  Step 3: Enrolling Stakeholders .................................................................................. 71
    Teleconference Kick-off Example .......................................................................... 72
    Preparing to Enroll Stakeholders .......................................................................... 75
    Smart Start Checklist .............................................................................................. 81

PHASE 2: IMPLEMENTING SUGGESTIONS .................................................................. 83
  Step 1: Capturing Stakeholder Suggestions .............................................................. 84
    Reviewing “Think” Do’s & Don’ts with Leader ................................................... 85
    Reviewing “Respond” Do’s & Don’ts with Leader ............................................... 90
    Reviewing “Change” Do’s & Don’ts with Leader ................................................. 95
    Checking in With Stakeholders .............................................................................. 100
    Reviewing “Ask” Do’s & Don’ts with Leader ...................................................... 102
Reviewing “Listen” Do’s & Don’ts with Leader ............ 107
Reviewing “Thank” Do’s & Don’ts with Leader ............ 112
Developing initial Action Plan with Leader ................. 117
Step 2: Assessing After Acting .................................... 125
After Action Review Questions ................................... 127
After Action Review Example ..................................... 130
Deciding what to share (Respond) with Stakeholders ... 127
Step 3: Building Momentum ........................................ 134
Getting the most out of Stakeholders ......................... 135
Keeping the Leader Motivated .................................. 139
Keys to Involving Stakeholders .................................. 142
Implementing Suggestions Checklist ............................ 143
PHASE 3: SUSTAINING SUCCESS ................................. 145
Step 1: Measuring Progress ........................................ 146
Steps in the Mini Survey Process ................................. 146
Reviewing the Mini Survey with the Leader ................. 153
Preparing Leader to complete an After Action Review 161
Step 2: Reinforcing the Behavior Change Process .......... 165
Being the conscience of the Process ......................... 165
Being a Role Model of the Process .............................. 168
Using Story Telling as a Learning Tool ....................... 168
Step 3: Planning the Transitions ................................. 171
Preparing for the Final Mini Survey ........................... 171
Reviewing the Final Mini Results ............................... 172
Completing a Final After Action Assessment ............... 174
Sustaining Success Checklist ...................................... 176
APPENDIX .................................................................. 178
Involving Stakeholder Skills Summary ....................... 179
How successful People Get Better Self Assessment ...... 197
List of Samples and Examples ................................. 198
INTRODUCTION

In its simplest form, this is a guide about “Do’s and Don’ts.” It is based upon an understanding that we are all successful largely because of our own actions; and, we are successful in spite of certain aspects of how we behave. A recurring theme of this Playbook is that we are successful because of certain beliefs and in spite of those same beliefs. We are successful because of certain behaviors and in spite of others. Equipped with this understanding, we will explore a 7-Step process that offers dramatic results for leaders who want to improve their leadership behavior.

What you find in reading this Playbook is very similar to the practice of any of the martial arts. To succeed you will have to follow a disciplined practice. This practice promises to be simple to understand and difficult to perform. The desired end result from this regimen of applying a specific set of skills, in a specific sequence, will be higher levels of success. Success here is defined as achieving a positive, long-term change in behavior as recognized and acknowledged by others. When this sequence of skills becomes a genuine practice, the leaders you coach will have internalized a method that will help them improve every single year, the rest of their lives.

The disciplined practice described in this Playbook will be of special value to leaders who have already achieved a high level of success and the possibility of their future success is not coming as easily as it has in the past. What is provided in this guide is a clear methodology to proactively move forward to a new level of ability, skill and confidence.

The Playbook is organized in a building block fashion. First, we will lay out for you a set of beliefs that are commonly held by successful people. It is not too difficult to recognize that our thought patterns and core beliefs have a major impact on our success. What we add to this is the realization that these same beliefs can have a strong influence on keeping us from becoming more successful. In simple terms, those same core beliefs that help us can also limit us in the future.

© 2019 Frank Wagner, Chris Coffey & Marshall Goldsmith
Our approach is tailored to take advantage of the positive aspects of successful people’s beliefs and, just as important, to overcome the negative aspects that can interfere with further development. Once we have examined these beliefs we will be ready, in building block fashion, to add a set of principles that allows us to build on the positive nature of these beliefs and avoid the inhibiting side that keep successful people from moving forward. Based on the pluses and minuses of a person’s beliefs around success, we have developed a set of principles that serve as guideposts to the methodology underlying Stakeholder Centered Coaching®.

The principles may seem a bit counter-intuitive at first. A few of them break with many of the traditional viewpoint of how coaches help people change. Later these principles will seem to you as self-evident, and nothing more than “organized common sense.” Arriving at such a perspective will only come after you have experienced the magic of applying a 7-Step process in a skillful and disciplined manner.

Prepared with an understanding of the impact of the beliefs of successful people and armed with powerful set of principles, you will be ready to learn the proven 7-Step discipline for achieving a lasting, positive change. Consistent with the theme of this Playbook, we will again provide a balanced view that recognizes there are better and worse ways to behave while using the 7-Step process.

Our efforts are designed to illustrate where to weaken those tendencies that are holding leaders back from future success, as well as strengthen those actions that will ensure future success. The approach presented here is largely based upon helping leaders avoid a set of habitual “Do Not’s” and incorporating a set of helpful “Do’s” in one’s interaction with Stakeholders.

Stakeholder Centered Coaching® is an established process that increases the likelihood of success for all leaders, regardless of position or situation, in improving any behavioral aspect of their leadership.
What makes Stakeholder-Centered Coaching® Unique: A Five-Step Process

STEP 1. Choose a Development Goal

Stakeholder-Centered Coaching® is not completely different from many coaching methodologies. And, it is unique in a number of key ways. Like most coaching it is based on a leader working to improve on a chosen developmental goal. Our focus is leadership behavior. Similar to many coaching frameworks, it all starts with the leader selecting a leadership goal to improve. Our methodology recognizes that one of the beliefs of successful leaders is the need to be the one choosing what to work on to improve. What we do is help leaders think through their decision with a cost/benefit analysis that helps leaders determine “Is it worth it” to invest the time and effort. We also insist that the leader’s manager is involved and agrees with the decision.

Where our process differs from most (and is unique from this point on) is an emphasis on Stakeholders. Once a leader chooses a goal, the other decision that is intimately tied to the chosen goal, is “Who are the relevant stakeholders?” Every goal has a set of stakeholders that is relevant to the leader’s behavior. These are individuals who are both affected by the leader’s behavior, and are clear beneficiaries of the leader improving in the behavior. Before starting to work on the development goal, and similar to the decision on what to work on to improve, the list of stakeholders is validated by the leader’s manager.

STEP 2: Enrolling Stakeholders as Key to the Process

Unlike most coaching methodologies, the center of attention is placed on Stakeholders. The Stakeholders are made the center of attention and are recruited as valued members of the change process. Either by the coach, or the leader, each Stakeholder is asked to actively participate in the leader’s improvement on an ongoing basis. They are asked to provide both feedback and feedforward to the leader; and, be willing to complete an anonymous and confidential mini-survey on the leaders improvement.

STEP 3: Stakeholder-Based Planning

Once Stakeholders understand their role, the process starts with all the Stakeholders providing suggestions to the leader and coach to build the initial Action Plan. In other words, the Action Plan is not developed based upon your expertise as a coach. The action plan is built from the initial request for suggestions from the Stakeholders.

The Leader and you, as the coach, work together to construct the initial Action Plan based on the input provided by the Stakeholders. Relevant parts of the Action Plan are also put into a Daily Checklist for the leader to consciously keep in his/her awareness while at work. The plan is distributed to the Stakeholders so they are aware of what to look for in providing feedback and further suggestions to the leader.

STEP 4: Disciplined Check-In with Stakeholders

The Leader uses the 7-Step Involving Stakeholder “Do’s and Don’ts” to check in with each Stakeholder once a month. During this brief 3 to 5 minute check-in the Leader asks for feedback on the prior 30 days; and, any suggestions moving forward for the next 30 days.

The Leader captures the thoughts of the Stakeholders and shares the results with the Coach. Together the Leader and Coach collaborate on what to add, change, or modify for the coming month based upon Stakeholder input. If any new action items are created for the Action Plan, this is communicated to all the Stakeholders. Our action planning is a continual process of refinement and improvement over the course of the coaching engagement.

STEP 5: Measure Results through Stakeholder Perception of Improvement
Typically half way through a coaching assignment, and the end of the assignment, a formal mini-survey is conducted with the Stakeholders to assess the progress made on the development goal. This is an anonymous, and confidential, survey conducted in order to validate the improvement made by the Leader. It also serves to gauge whether or not the Stakeholders are recognizing and acknowledging the change.

With the results of the mini-survey, the Leader then writes up an After Action Review to document what has happened, why, and what learning is to be taken forward into the future. In a disciplined manner, the Leader captures learning from the process. This After Action Review is usually shared with the Leader's manager.

Stakeholder Centered Coaching® Requirements

As a Coach, to work with a Leader using the Stakeholder Centered Coaching® process, there are only a few requirements. These are:

The Leader:

1. Has a clear Development Goal & identified Stakeholders
2. Goes Public with Goal with the Stakeholders
3. Builds an Action Plan based on Stakeholder input
4. Follows up with Stakeholders with enough frequency
5. Formally Measures Results with Mini-Surveys

Everything else in this Playbook, and what Coaches brings from their existing tool kit, is optional and can help the Leader achieving a long-term positive change in behavior.

For example, the use of a Daily Checklist around the most important steps in a Leader's Action Plan is not a requirement. for Stakeholder Centered Coaching. It is highly recommended however. This is a centerpiece of Marshall’s third bestselling book Triggers. We do believe this clearly increases the likelihood leaders will both improve in their behavior and get credit from others that the improvement took place. The reason this is not a requirement is the fact we had years of experience helping leaders achieve success without the use of a daily sheet.

What is described in this book comes from Marshall Goldsmith’s, Chris Coffey’s and Frank Wagner’s ongoing experience working with highly successful people. So, let’s start at the beginning by looking at three interrelated and reinforcing beliefs around success that will affect everything that follows in this Playbook.

The three beliefs that are critical, in our experience, that affect our work as coaches are: “I am successful;” “I choose to succeed;” and, I will succeed.” Together these beliefs are worthy of our attention as we begin working with a leader.

BELIEFS OF SUCCESSFUL PEOPLE

All three of these beliefs: “I am…” “I choose…” and “I will be…” successful all deal with the relationship between the person and an internal and elusive viewpoint correlated with winning, achievement, and triumph.

Belief # 1 - I AM SUCCESSFUL

The good news for successful people is their copious quantity of self-confidence. The “I Am Successful” belief is positively correlated with a willingness to take needed risks and to do “what you think is right.” If one carefully considers what most leaders are tasked with doing, it becomes readily apparent that courage is a necessary ingredient. The self-confidence to act as a leader is bolstered by this essential personal belief. There are a number of what we like to refer to as pluses, or positives, connected with the “I Am Successful” belief. (A few of these are captured in the table that follows.)

The challenge a leader faces when strongly agreeing with their own press clippings and the resulting feeling that they have the universal keys to success is also captured in the table below. The CEO of one Fortune 100 Company (who has had many ups and downs on the admiration scale) noted, “Success can lead to arrogance. When we become arrogant we quit listening. When we quit listening we stop changing. In today’s rapidly moving world, if we quit changing, we will ultimately fail.” You have to be willing to avoid succumbing to the negative side of believing you are successful.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Plus (+)</th>
<th>Minus (-)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Have an overall positive self-image; “winners” in the game of life</td>
<td>Consistently over-rate their performance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Have the courage to apply their ability and strengths</td>
<td>Have difficulty accepting validity of feedback inconsistent with self-image</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Possess “contagious confidence”</td>
<td>May discount opinions of people who do not match their level of success</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

One of the most important lessons found in this Playbook is the willingness of successful people to honestly seek and learn from the input of others. When the minuses associated with the “I Am Successful” belief take precedence over the pluses, a leader severely limits the possibility for this learning to take place. They only listen to others who fit the description of being a professional peer who has achieved the same extra ordinary level of success as themself. And, this is a very small group.

In the extreme case, the person will only listen to himself, or herself. In other words, they become terminally arrogant. No one else is allowed to help. No one else is considered worthy of providing helpful feedback or suggestions. Since most of the useful information about us comes from others who act as a mirror, the sense of superiority gives credence to the phrase: “successful in spite of, instead of because of…” our unwillingness to listen to others.

The good news about this belief is the inherent sense of self-assurance that is a requirement to do the tough things needed to truly improve as a leader. The bad news is the accompanying arrogance restricts the number of people whose feedback they take seriously. Their unwillingness to seek out, or hear, input on their leadership cuts them off from those who may be their best source of constructive data.

Belief # 2 - I CHOOSE TO SUCCEED

Along with the belief that the leader you are coaching is a successful person, there is another key belief that relates to that sense of mastering one’s own fate or controlling one’s own destiny. We refer to this belief as “I Choose to Succeed.” With this belief the leader has a strong need to be in charge of what to work on to improve. No one else is going to make the choice for them. No one else is going to “re-wire” who they are.

Most people resist being told what to do. Especially when the subject matter deals with who they are as a person and what they will become. What we have found is the amplitude of this belief seems cranked way up the more the person sees herself, or himself, as a highly successful person.
The good news is that if the leader you are coaching chooses to work on something, the leader will also bring a very strong personal commitment, determination, and ownership to the goal that is set. You will not have to spend a lot of time convincing the leader why this goal was the right choice, as it was a personal choice.

Many successful people are influenced only by others they consider their professional peers. They resist the opinions, viewpoints, and observations of those that don’t fit their own self-concept of success. They rely on their own opinions, viewpoints, and observations often to a fault. Successful people live by a code of personal responsibility and self-determination. This belief, just like the others has some incredibly positive aspects, and some challenging negatives.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Plus (+)</th>
<th>Minus (-)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>High need for self-determination</td>
<td>Need for control may cause resistance to change</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Do what they do because of personal commitment</td>
<td>Can be too superstitious about their choices</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Possess a strong sense of ownership</td>
<td>In their head and heart may not feel the “real me” can, or needs to, change</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The challenge you will undoubtedly face with the dark side of this belief is a nagging fear by the leader who has to make a choice to improve. This fear is that if they change any behavior this will break the “string of success” that has gotten them to where they are today (the superstition). For example, take a real leader we coached who saw himself as “hard working, dedicated, smart, ethical; and a poor coach.” For a long time he had, in various forms, received feedback that he should improve in his coaching skills. He didn’t deny this assessment. And, everyone else agreed with it too.
You would think it would be easy for him to choose to improve as a coach to his direct reports. It is hard to argue against the benefits of good coaching. Yet, this executive had been playing a game with himself. A game steeped in the depths of superstition. It begins with a simple truth. He is a highly successful businessman and he has never been a good coach. Confusion sets in. There just might be a correlation? If pushed to change by others to improve in his coaching, the fear can escalate to pure self-delusion.

The belief now takes on the potency of causation. This otherwise smart and logical executive finds himself believing that he is successful because of his past behavior; which includes being a lousy or non-existent coach. For all his confidence in most things, here he possesses little, to no, courage to face this shortcoming. His ultimate conclusion is “I am successful because I’m a bad coach. If I start working on this I might become too soft or unfocused on what I should be doing.”

So, we begin to see the dilemma. The strong sense of being in control and taking ownership may lead to avoiding the choice to take on what is truly important to improve as a leader.

There is good news with this real life example of an executive who had not been a good coach. After eventually choosing to work on this leadership skill, his thought processes and behaviors changed over time. After becoming a good coach, he admitted to fooling himself for a long time. And, he could even laugh at himself for his cleverness at hiding this fact from himself and all the misspent energy he spent deluding himself.

Remember, just as our beliefs are among our strongest gifts, they can also be our Achilles heel. We need to be mindful that we are powerful enough to play a good game of self-delusion with ourselves. We don’t want to admit that we might fail, or even worse, are not capable of doing something well. Here is where we need to come back to the “positive” side of choosing to succeed. Coupled with the positive elements of their beliefs, we bet that successful people will get better at whatever they choose to improve.
Belief # 3 - I WILL SUCCEED

Along with the “I Am Successful” and “I Choose to be Successful,” the third belief is possibly the most important one of all. The first belief deals with the past. The second one deals with the present. The third one deals with the future. The best news for possessing this belief is that the believer will continue to succeed in the future. Obviously, the overriding positive attribute associated with this belief is optimism.

Successful people tend to see a bright future. They are not content on retiring based upon what they have achieved. They are convinced the future holds a promise of even higher levels of success. And, the major reason for this optimism is that they will control their own destiny and future, as they have described up to this point.

As true believers in themselves, they are not the type to “give up”, even in the face of extremely difficult odds. They are not likely to view outside circumstances as a reason to quit. In its pure sense, this belief leads to a “no excuses” approach toward reaching their goal. The virtue of persistence is legendary. The ability to never quit on what they choose to succeed is one of the major reasons for gaining a reputation for being a successful person. So, what can be the downside of such a belief?

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Plus (+)</th>
<th>Minus (-)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Do not believe that external forces control their destiny</td>
<td>Face the danger of over-commitment</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Unflappable sense of optimism</td>
<td>Having to win at all cost; winning too much</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Persistent even in the face of difficult odds</td>
<td>Can have a hard time “letting go” of failure</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

One challenge the leader you are coaching faces with this belief is a real danger of over-committing and drowning in a sea of tasks to be completed. The leader’s optimism, at some point, becomes a genuine liability. There is an overload point, and a burnout point, for everybody. Even if one thinks differently, there are no supermen and superwomen. Knowing when to say “no,” when not to make a commitment, is hard when you have a strong belief that you will succeed with whatever one takes on as a challenge.

There is a line we all cross when persistence takes on the air of foolishness. In life there are times when the right choice is to stop putting out the effort and cut one’s losses. Letting go is painful for everyone. For successful people it can be downright excruciating. Successful people can have an incredibly difficult time admitting they are going down the wrong path. When faced with impending failure, successful people may have a tendency to become even more committed and work even harder instead of re-channeling their energies into more profitable pursuits.

One of the darkest clouds connected with this belief, is a need to win at all costs. This is the saving grace for a successful person when winning is critical and important. The exact opposite occurs when winning really leads to losing. An example would probably be helpful here to understand this point.

A common example we use would be getting into a disagreement with one’s spouse (or significant other) over what to do and winding up going along with their suggestion. After doing what your spouse (or significant other) wanted to do, re-engaging in their decision to show them why they were wrong. You may win the argument, and lose something more precious.

Letting someone else win is the right approach in some situations. Unfortunately, a person with an unhealthy addiction to winning and success interprets any situation where they are not the winner as “I am the loser.”

In summary, the “I Am Successful” “I Choose to Succeed,” and “I Will Succeed” beliefs are wonderful gifts the leader you are coaching possesses. These are attributes worth exploiting during the coaching. And, these same beliefs can equally inhibit your efforts as a coach and clearly get in the way of the leaders future improvement. As Marshall made famous in his first best seller “What Got You Here, Won’t Get You There.”
Your role as a coach will be to capitalize on the pluses (+) and to orchestrate around the minuses (-) of these beliefs. This Guide is intended to help you navigate around these beliefs. Building off of the upside of these beliefs and managing the downside of these same beliefs is at the heart of the work you have in store for yourself.

The Stakeholder-Centered Coaching® approach is grounded in an understanding of the beliefs of successful people and the power of the reinforcing cycle of encouraging development. It is also guided by three fundamental principles. These principles come from years of executive coaching experience working with successful people who have been working on personal behavioral change.

STAKEHOLDER CENTERED COACHING® PRINCIPLES

![Diagram showing Stakeholder Centered Coaching principles]

First Principle: Place the attention and focus on your stakeholders

The true leverage points in behavioral change are the people who are interdependent with, and work with, the leader every day. Our approach is to turn these stakeholders into the true coaches of the leader who you are working with to improve.
Our experience has validated that those around the leader, those who interact with the person you are coaching on a frequent basis, are the best “experts” in how the leader’s behavior can improve with them. This approach employs a systems perspective by including stakeholders actively in the process as a vehicle to increase the likelihood that improvement in the leader’s behavior becomes a habit.

Our coaching approach is different from most other types of coaching in its emphasis on making the stakeholders the coaches for the leader undergoing development. Our role as formal coaches moves more into the background as an orchestrator, cheerleader, and integrator.

Second Principle: Emphasize FeedForward

Most coaching and leadership development has focused on a process of feedback as the key to improving. There can be great value derived from receiving constructive and well-timed feedback. The Stakeholder-Centered approach breaks with this long tradition by placing significantly more focus on FeedForward over feedback. FeedForward is a technical term for a very simple process; namely, suggestions for the future.

A perfect analogy for what we propose here is the windshield of a car. Sitting in the driver’s seat, looking over the steering wheel we see two things. Strategically placed in the top center of our field of vision is a rear view mirror. This is akin to the mechanism of feedback. It allows us to look behind us, where we have already traveled. The rest of our field of vision is directed through the glass to what is in front of us. This view is akin to the FeedForward process. In the racing world the sage advice is to focus on the speedway in front of you, not the dangerous wall within inches to the side of your vehicle, or what is behind you.

We have found it is much more effective to be focused on the future versus the past. We cannot do anything about the past. The future is dynamic and unrestrained. FeedForward is a process of asking for suggestions for future action. Remember it is the leader’s internal belief set that largely affects action. Successful people want to have influence and control over their situation. We all can do something about the future. This takes advantage of the positive components of the three belief sets held by the leader you are coaching, namely, I am and will continue to succeed. Leaders can genuinely do something about their future.

Additionally, most of us tend to resist when we are being judged. Do not misunderstand our emphasis on FeedForward as an indictment of feedback. Feedback is an important part of the process described in this guide. It is still needed. The amount of feedback needed, remembering our example of the windshield of a car, is proportionate to the size of the rearview mirror to the windshield. We believe in focused feedback on specific actions over recent events as necessary for our coaching.

As you learn and use the 7-Step process for involving Stakeholders on a monthly basis, feedback will focus on the immediate prior month’s actions the leader has taken. Remember, the future holds unlimited possibility. The past behind us and cannot be changed. The principle here is to focus on the future. Focus on what can be done.

Third Principle: Change behavior and perception in parallel

It is useful for the leader to work in parallel on changing a behavior and the perception of that behavior by the leader’s stakeholders. It is very interesting to note, that those around the leader also need to change. Their perception of the leader's behavior has to change. All of us suffer from having perceptions that are incredibly resilient. People do not readily give up their prior assumptions, opinions, and beliefs. Thus, a key aspect of improving as a leader is to change the perception of stakeholders regarding that behavior.

These three principles serve as the foundation for the 7-Step Involving Stakeholder Process that is described next in this Guide. As previously stated, our experience suggests that the steps in the process must be rigorously practiced for at least a year before there is certainty that the change will be rooted in enough experience to become permanent. A year is our normal standard. Success in modifying some behaviors can take even longer.

This is not theory. This Guide is about action. Success in this process does not have to take up a lot of time. In fact, using the methodology in this Guide is very time efficient. As you help a leader put in practice the 7-Step process, you can focus on a specific section of this Guide that is relevant at that time.
7-Step Involving Stakeholder Process

The practical, and sometimes counter-intuitive, nature of the Involving Stakeholder Process is based on an understanding of the principles that underlie this process and the beliefs (+) and (-) of successful people. Each step is specifically organized to build off of the positive nature of these beliefs and render the negative aspects less likely to hold you back.

STEP 1. ASK – The best, and in some cases the only, way to get the gift of others’ perceptions is to ask for it. If you are committed to becoming more successful, you will be willing to ask for both suggestions and feedback. When done properly, asking is communicated in the spirit of self-improvement and in a way that the opinion of the person asked is valued.

STEP 2. LISTEN – This is far from easy when the topic of conversation is something so dear to our hearts. Here your commitment requires avoiding some common pitfalls. You have to avoid defending any past actions. And, in listening, you will need to accept others’ opinions as their perception of reality. In other words, you will avoid judging whether the input you are hearing is “right” and “wrong.”

STEP 3. THANK – As this process will be an ongoing one, successful people understand the value in reinforcing the process as others provide their feedback and suggestions. Just as it takes courage to ask, it often takes equal courage for others to give us their feedback and ideas for improvement. Genuine commitment to improve is shown by expressing your appreciation for the help others provide.

STEP 4. THINK – It is the mark of a wise person to consider what others say before reacting. For one thing, it helps avoid a tendency many people have for over-reacting. This reaction may be too negative or too positive. You do not want to build a reputation or over committing and setting yourself up to under deliver on your promises. Being thoughtful is a valuable way to be seen when it comes to hearing what others have to say.
STEP 5. RESPOND – A successful person, committed to improvement will always respond to all who provide feedback or suggestions. When others have taken both the risk and the time to provide you with input, they deserve to know what you plan to do about it. In communicating about your own behavioral change it is wise to keep it simple and positive.

STEP 6. CHANGE – The purpose of the first six steps is to do something. Behavioral improvement necessitates doing more of something, less of something, or something entirely new. The mark of a successful person is keeping the change process alive and moving forward. You will monitor yourself relative to what you are doing to improve.

STEP 7. FOLLOW-UP – This step is really a reminder to use the previous six steps on a regular basis. This means checking in with others in a regimented, disciplined manner. This follow-up step is, by far, the most important step in the process. It is the best way to demonstrate to others that you are serious about change.

Our experience suggests that the steps in the process must be genuinely practiced for at least one year before there is certainty that the change will be rooted in enough experience to become permanent. A year is a realistic standard. Success in modifying some behaviors can take even longer.

The more powerful benefit for the leader is when the process itself becomes a habit. Truly successful people are committed to getting better every year. The greatest gift you give as a coach is when this 7-Step process becomes an ongoing discipline for the leader.

From our extensive experience coaching leaders, we have found that the actions they take, and the actions they avoid, when checking in with Stakeholders has a lot to do with their eventual success in improving AND getting credit from their Stakeholders that they have made a genuine change.

The Do’s and Don’ts we have observed include:
Do’s & Don’ts of Involving Stakeholders

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DO NOT</th>
<th>DO</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Stick with your fan club</td>
<td>Include as many as you can</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Expect instant help</td>
<td>Keep the process upbeat</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Take up too much of their time</td>
<td>Vary involvement as needed</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

STEPS FOR ENCOURAGING DEVELOPMENT

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DO NOT</th>
<th>DO</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Step 1. ASK</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wait for a “better time” to ask</td>
<td>Be concise</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act skeptical or doubtful</td>
<td>Be specific</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Put yourself down</td>
<td>Be positive</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Step 2. LISTEN</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Use “No,” “But,” or “However”</td>
<td>Pay undivided attention</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Make excuses</td>
<td>Capture what is said</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exhibit impatience or anger</td>
<td>Clarify/Confirm what you heard</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Step 3. THANK</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Use a dejected tone</td>
<td>Say “Thank You” quickly</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Act artificial</td>
<td>Use first name (if appropriate)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Be insincere</td>
<td>Be genuine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Step 4. THINK</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Engage in “delusional” thinking</td>
<td>Assess benefits of changing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prove the input is wrong</td>
<td>Assess cost of changing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Validate “this is the way I am”</td>
<td>Decide if it is worth it</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Step 5. RESPOND</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Critique feedback/FeedForward</td>
<td>Be brief</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Respond to too many things</td>
<td>Be positive</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Over-commit</td>
<td>Be future focused</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Step 6. CHANGE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Procrastinate</td>
<td>Apply suggestions in parallel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Give into “feeling like a phony”</td>
<td>Maintain momentum</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Expect instant success</td>
<td>Make change visible</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Step 7. FOLLOW-UP</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dwell on the past</td>
<td>Politely push for specifics</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Become complacent</td>
<td>Reinforce the process</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brag, gloat, or show off</td>
<td>Check your ego at the door</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Overall, you have been successful in involving others when they feel…
- They have contributed to your success
- They have been acknowledged for helping
- They want to continue helping you improve as a leader

You have been successful…

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>… in ASKING when others see you as:</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>▪ Choosing the behavior you will improve</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Wanting to change this behavior</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Working on something important to you</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>…in LISTENING when others see you as:</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>▪ Wanting their input</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Paying undivided attention</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Genuinely hearing their message</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>…in THANKING when others see you as:</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>▪ Appreciative of the feedback/feedforward</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Taking their input seriously</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Willing to respond, once having an opportunity to reflect</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>…in THINKING when you see yourself:</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>▪ Not giving in to superstition or “negative” self talk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Doing a levelheaded cost-benefit analysis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Committed with your decision of what to develop</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>…in RESPONDING when others see you as:</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>▪ Appreciative of help from all stakeholders</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Committed to improve</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Confident you will improve</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>…in CHANGING when others see you:</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>▪ Actively working on what you committed to improve</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Demonstrating success</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Not likely to return to your old habits</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>…in FOLLOWING-UP when others see you:</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>▪ Eager to gain stakeholders insight</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Actually learning from the experience</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Producing measurable results</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

© 2019 Frank Wagner, Chris Coffey & Marshall Goldsmith
What a Leader Needs to Succeed

After Marshall Goldsmith had worked with Alan Mulally, the now retired CEO of The Ford Motor Company, for a number of years, Alan told Marshall his biggest challenge was “client selection.” As a successful leader on the grandest stage, Alan knew the Stakeholder Centered Coaching process as well as anyone. He first learned it when he used Marshall to help him improve when he ran Boeing Commercial. Later, he incorporated it not only in his own approach to personal improvement; he also used the same structure to help his leadership team in their turn around of The Ford Motor Company.

The process of involving Stakeholders, and using the 7-step process with them, requires a leader to possess a certain degree of three things. These three things that we can refer to as Stakeholder Centered Coaching® virtues are: courage, humility, and discipline. The courage and humility pieces are needed in order to “Ask,” “Listen,” and “Thank,” each of one’s Stakeholders. Both are also needed to reflect and “Think” about what one is learning about oneself through the process, then “Respond” in a productive manner with Stakeholders.

Courage and Discipline is needed to implement suggestions and actually “Change.” And, most importantly, Discipline is needed to “Follow Up” on a regular basis month after month.

We have created a little survey that helps you determine the readiness to embark on the Stakeholder Centered Coaching® journey. You can share this with a leader or simply do your own assessment of the fit between what our process requires of a leader and the leaders ability and willingness to practice the skills required effectively.
Leaders Readiness for Stakeholder Centered Coaching®

How willing are you to:

COURAGE

▪ Communicate to others what you are working on to improve as a leader?
▪ Ask others for personal feedback/suggestions regarding your own behavior?
▪ Avoid procrastination or waiting for a better time to try out new behaviors?
▪ Honestly look at what behaviors you would benefit from stopping, starting, or changing?

HUMILITY

▪ Ask others to “help you” while working on your personal growth as a leader?
▪ Truly “listen” to feedback and suggestions about your leadership?
▪ Show genuine appreciation for feedback/suggestions on your leadership by saying “Thank You?”
▪ Keep your “ego” in check?

DISCIPLINE

▪ Stick to a monthly routine of following up with others you asked to support you as you develop new behaviors?
▪ Manage any defensive reactions when others point out what have not done well or what you could do better (i.e., making excuses, getting angry, disagreeing)?
▪ Spend the needed time to change a behavior that is not comfortable for you?
▪ Spend a few minutes every day reviewing a checklist of actions you are implementing from your plan to improve?

Scale: Very Willing (5), Willing (4) Somewhat Willing (3), Not Sure (2), Not Willing (1)
In summary, the Stakeholder Centered Coaching® approach is a disciplined practice that underlies how successful people get even better over time. This discipline is found in a reinforcing cycle of seven steps the leader uses with his or her stakeholders. By repeating these steps with individuals who are impacted by the leader’s behavior, the leader will achieve the long-term, positive change and will receive recognition for this from the stakeholders.

What we have found is the most successful people recruit others to help them change. This is more of an interpersonal process than a solo activity. Changing both behavior and perception becomes significantly more likely with stakeholder involvement. When it comes to behavioral improvement, the greatest source of insight and support are those who are impacted by someone’s actions. Effective people include others as the best measure of their ongoing success.
THE BEHAVIORAL COACHING SKILLS

Finally, as a Coach, there are a number of specific skills that will serve your role of being a catalyst to speeding up the process of helping leaders improve in their behavior. Most of the seven skills described below will be used numerous times throughout the flow of coaching a leader.

Behavioral Goal Setting

The ability to help leaders assess what to develop in their leadership behavior using 360° assessments, interviews, and/or observational skills.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Select the Right Behavior/Stakeholders</th>
<th>FIT TO LEADER’S NEEDS</th>
<th>CONNECT TO LEADER’S WIDER WORLD</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>• Keep diagnosis balanced (pluses and minuses)</td>
<td></td>
<td>• Familiarize yourself with the leader’s strategic context</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Support AND challenge leader’s “self diagnosis”</td>
<td></td>
<td>• Link goal to future challenges / opportunities</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Iteratively clarify the benefits of change</td>
<td></td>
<td>• Help select relevant stakeholders to recruit</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Your first step as a coach is to facilitate the behavioral goal setting process to help the leader choose a goal and a set of stakeholders that she, or he, considers important and meaningful. Successful people are much more comfortable with the feedback and FeedForward processes that will follow if they feel it is coming from the right people on the right behavior. Remember the leader’s need to be the one choosing what to improve and who will play the role of stakeholder.
The second step as a coach is to ensure the leader’s manager also agrees that the “right” behavior and the “right” stakeholders are involved. At the end of the assignment and after the leader has improved, you do not want the manager saying: “the leader picked the wrong behavior;” or, “what the leader worked on was not that important.” To the contrary, you want the leader and manager to feel the positive change in behavior was observed and recognized by the right people, and that the change was important.

Behavioral Rehearsal

The ability to demonstrate how to interact/communicate with a stakeholder through demonstration, leader practice, review and re-rehearsal of the interaction (if needed).

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Practice Until “Good Enough”</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>PREPARE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Arrange the conversation</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>the leader will follow</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Check against Do’s/Don’ts</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(Encouraging Development)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Know the lines cold by</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>practicing yourself</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

In every profession, the very best practice what is important to do before executing. Time is invested up front to ensure the performance is flawless. You want the conversations that leaders have with stakeholders, around their own improvement, to come off effortlessly and gracefully.

Most people are far more comfortable talking about what they are going to say than actually rehearsing. When leaders say they are going to communicate something to a stakeholder, have them practice it with you playing the stakeholder. Even what may appear to be a straightforward conversation can be fumbled through quite ineffectively.

If ineffective communication is going to occur, you want it to happen with you where clumsy or awkward communication doesn’t count. You want highly effective communication to occur with the stakeholders.

Action Planning

The ability to help leaders come up with a course of action to achieve their behavioral goal by translating Stakeholders suggestions into clear desired effects and concrete actions.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Plan for Action</th>
<th>INCREASE THE FOCUS</th>
<th>ACCELERATE THE EXECUTION</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>INCREASE THE FOCUS</td>
<td>• Distinguish objectives/ends from the actions/means</td>
<td>• Help identify and tap hidden resources/assets</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>• Define success (Identify success measures)</td>
<td>• Push the schedule</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>• Help construct specific, actionable suggestions</td>
<td>• Keep emphasis on the desired effects</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

In today’s working climate, leaders are excessively busy. Helping build an executable plan with success clearly defined is essential to get off with a smart start. A good plan, by itself, will enhance any leader’s confidence that he or she will pull off the desired improvement in behavior.

To change behavior requires doing something different or new. The old adage of “insanity being a state of doing the same things over and over again and expecting different results,” is the logic behind preparing for new actions. Keep the plan simple by only including actions that will be implemented. Whatever is in the plan, make sure it gets started soon. Never let actions that can be taken this week slip into the next week.

Behavioral Reinforcement

The ability to help leaders by spotting improvement and providing appropriate levels of recognition for progress in a timely, specific, and genuine manner.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Provide Positive Support</th>
<th>ACTIVELY SEEK DATA ON RESULTS</th>
<th>ACT AS AN “ANGEL” ADVOCATE (vs. a devil’s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Look for approximations of success</td>
<td>• Look for approximations of success</td>
<td>• Regular doses of reinforcement work best</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Focus on the matches (not mismatches) to desired effects</td>
<td>• Focus on the matches (not mismatches) to desired effects</td>
<td>• Always tie to some specific action taken/result achieved</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seek out positive news from stakeholders/others</td>
<td>• Seek out positive news from stakeholders/others</td>
<td>• Encourage others to provide positive feedback</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Another byproduct of our busy lives is how readily we miss the positive things going on around us. You cannot slow things down enough so that everyone (the leader and his or her stakeholders) sees the good that is happening. What you can do is pay special attention and capture positive examples that the leader is improving on his or her behavioral goal.

Many years ago Ken Blanchard, when he wrote The One Minute Manager, reminded us of the power of reinforcement for achieving improvement. If you could only remind individuals when they were off course or could only remind them when they were on course, positive reinforcement when “on course” leads more quickly to improvement. That is why Ken coined the phrase: “catch people doing something almost right.”
After Action Assessments

The ability to help leaders debrief and gain insight into their actions through questioning skills, enforcing openness and candor, and keeping the conversation on track.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>BE THE ACTION PLAN CONSCIENCE</th>
<th>KEY ON THE FUTURE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>• Ensure assessments take place in a timely fashion</td>
<td>• Keep the conversation future focused</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Make process easy and comfortable as possible</td>
<td>• Do not allow guilt, shame, or blame into discussion</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Provide reminders of key learning</td>
<td>• Use learning to re-plan the Action Plan</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

As the world becomes more busy and complex, we seem to rarely find the right time to learn. We have a tendency to move on quickly after doing anything, tackling the next action item on our “to do” list. Such behavior robs us of the wealth of learning available from the actual events we experience.

After Action Assessments, or Reviews, takes a structured approach to capturing, digesting, and capitalizing on our learning. This applies equally to successful experience as it does to failure. Analyzing and understanding at a deeper level what went right is necessary to ensure new behavior becomes a habit. Just as useful is analyzing and understanding, at a deeper level, what went wrong. This is necessary to determine what to do differently next time. The main benefit of practicing After Action Assessments is they are powerful tools to speed up the learning curve.
Story Telling

The ability to help leaders in their development by having a teachable point of view and the skill to convey this knowledge through clear and compelling narrative or anecdote.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Make a Point</th>
<th>MAKE MESSAGE OF THE STORY CLEAR</th>
<th>MAKE MESSAGE OF THE STORY COMPELLING</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>• Have a specific “point to the story”</td>
<td>• Use a grabber</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>• Keep your stories simple and brief enough</td>
<td>• Hard data &gt; Soft data</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>• Tell the story so the “moral” is unambiguous</td>
<td>• Pull emotional strings</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Never miss an opportunity to find another story to add to your repertoire. The history of the human race is the transference of wisdom through story telling. Even after the invention of the printing press, stories maintain their appeal and special place.

Stories are found in our own experiences. We also can learn the stories told by others (creative stealing of stories is well practiced in the fields of coaching and leadership development). Stories are easy to find by reading newspapers, periodicals, and books (sometimes one book can give you a dozen unique stories). Entertainment is another treasure trove of material.

As a coach, one of the most powerful roles you play is storyteller. It is here you can help a leader understand something he or she needs to know in a short, yet memorable way. And this is the point; your job is to keep certain ideas, or thoughts, conscious enough to influence the behavior of the leader you are coaching. Stories are the apparatus you use to implant the necessary wisdom.
Modeling the 7-Step Process

The ability to personally use the 7-Step Involving Stakeholder Process yourself while avoiding the “Don’ts” in your own behavior

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>SET A GOOD EXAMPLE</th>
<th>IMPROVE AS YOU MOVE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>• Use the 7-Steps yourself</td>
<td>• Follow-up on your coaching</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• If a “Don’t” is pointed out to you, say “Thank You”</td>
<td>• Be willing to change how you are coaching</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• If a “Do” is pointed out to you, say “Thank You”</td>
<td>• End a better coach than you started</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Setting an example, by practicing the 7-Step process yourself with the leader you are coaching, may be the most useful skill of all. This provides the leader with a personal experience of what it is like to be a stakeholder and be on the receiving end of the behaviors practiced in the 7-Step process. An underlying message you convey is: “If this is good for you to do, it is also good for me to do as a coach.”

As humans, we gather information through our senses. For the majority of leaders in Western culture the preferred sense for inputting information is the visual sense. What this means is seeing something is a more powerful medium for learning than hearing something. Showing is a more effective vehicle for learning than having a conversation. Yet, we often seem to rely on verbal exchanges to impart learning.

All seven skills described here will be used numerous times throughout the flow of the year. The more you use these skills, the more they will become second nature to you. Some already are. Others will have to be further developed while you are coaching. The goal for you as a Coach should be the same as the person you are coaching, namely, be successful and get even more successful.
COACHING FLOW

The Coaching Flow, and the way this Guide is organized, can be broken down into three main phases:

PHASE 1: START SMART
- Contracting for Coaching
- Selecting Behavior(s) to Develop
- Enrolling Stakeholders

PHASE 2: IMPLEMENTING SUGGESTIONS
- Capturing Stakeholder Suggestions
- Assessing After Acting
- Building Momentum

PHASE 3: SUSTAINING SUCCESS
- Measuring Progress (Mini-Surveys & After Action Assessments)
- Reinforcing the Coaching for Behavior Change Process
- Planning the Transition
What is laid out in the following Coach’s Checklists is devoted to the normal flow of a yearlong coaching assignment. Our belief is that the forming of new behavioral habits takes time. It is far too easy to change and then, over time, slip back into old practices. Even though our belief is that it takes a year of disciplined practice and follow-up, everything described in this guide can be applied to a six-month assignment.

FINAL THOUGHT

Everything we lay out for you is based on a practical, real-world perspective of the task to help a leader achieve positive, long-term change in behavior. Our approach takes into account you, the people you coach, and living in a world of complexity and time constraints. Applying the methods in this Play Book will not take up a lot of precious time for anyone involved. Our purpose is to help you gain leverage through the monthly application of a well-defined process made up of a few simple actions that provide a huge payoff.

Atul Gawande wrote a powerful and practical book aimed at improving the efficacy of surgeons doing the important work of saving peoples’ lives and avoiding complications during recovery. His book titled “The Checklist Manifesto” drew from the discovery and disciplined use of checklist by airline pilots who also have a mission of doing their work in a way that preserves human life.

The Coach’s Checklist will be organized around a set of checklists to assist you in the process of helping leaders apply the principles and 7-Step process with key stakeholders in their normal day-to-day activities at work.

There are blank pages in your Coach’s Checklist for you to keep notes on how you will personalize the process to your own experience and style. Treat this Play Book as a notebook for your own use. The material found inside is far from complete. It serves as a guide to the proverbial 20% that will provide 80% of value when coaching for behavioral change. What you add will provide additional value to you becoming an invaluable resource as a coach and in your own personal life.

The better a leader practices the “DO” column, and avoids the “DO NOT” column, the more likely that leader will be to improve in whatever he or she chooses to work on. The key to helping a leader get even better is summarized on the next page. Everything in the Coach’s Checklist supports the process of eliminating the actions on the “DO NOT” column and engraining the “DO” column as a habit.

The next page of this introduction is a short Self Assessment on the use, or non-use of this seven-step developmental process. This assessment can be used as a guide to how well a leader is doing in applying the principles and methods described in this book.

The range of scores on this Self-Assessment is 9 to 45. The higher the score, the more a leader is acting consistent with the seven-step Involving Stakeholder Process. Increasing one’s score on any question is a positive step toward practicing this methodology. A check on this self-assessment periodically helps to assess progress in making these leader skills a habit.

What is laid out in the following Coach’s Checklists is devoted to the normal flow of a yearlong coaching assignment. Our belief is that the forming of new behavioral habits takes time. It is far too easy to change and then, over time, slip back into old practices. Even though our belief is that it takes a year of disciplined practice and follow-up, everything described in this guide can be applied to a six-month assignment.
HOW SUCCESSFUL PEOPLE GET BETTER
Self-Assessment

1. How many times in the past month have you asked anyone for feedback on something you did?
   Zero 1 – 2 times 3 - 5 times 6 - 10 times Over 10 times

2. How many times in the past month have you asked anyone for suggestions on how to improve something?
   Zero 1 – 2 times 3 - 5 times 6 - 10 times Over 10 times

3. How often would others say you listen well?
   Never Sometimes Frequently Most of the Time All the Time

4. How frequently do you say “thank you” when others give you feedback or suggestions?
   Never Sometimes Frequently Most of the Time All the Time

5. How often do you think about the costs and benefits of your actions/behavior before implementing?
   Never Sometimes Frequently Most of the Time All the Time

6. How often would others say you are defensive when you respond to their feedback or suggestions?
   Most of the Time Frequently Sometimes Every so Often Never

7. How many people would say they are actively involved in helping you improve and have been recognized for it?
   No One 1 – 2 people 3 – 5 people 6 – 10 people Over 10 people

8. How effective have you been in changing your behavior as a leader?
   Ineffective Somewhat Ineffective Somewhat Effective Effective

9. To what extent would others describe you as following-up with them on your efforts to improve as a leader?
   Never Sometimes Frequently Most of the Time All the Time
Stakeholder-Centered Coaching® Definitions

360º Feedback: A process whereby a Leader’s Manager, Direct Reports, Peers, and himself/herself provides feedback on the Leader’s behavior. This can be done electronically with a survey, or conducted by the coach through a set of interviews.

360º Feedback Participant: A person who is selected to help provide feedback that will be used to assist the Leader in choosing the developmental goal worked on during the coaching engagement. These participants may, or may not, be picked as Stakeholders for the process. The choice of Stakeholders will be based upon the development goal selected.

After Action Assessment: A process where a Leader reviews actions just taken in order to learn what to continue and what to change in order to be an effective leader. Formally, this is used after each Mini-Survey Report that measures the amount of improvements perceived by Stakeholders.

Beliefs of Successful People: All of the Stakeholder-Centered Coaching® principles and methods are based upon understanding how successful people think about themselves. This coaching process capitalizes on the positive beliefs these Leaders have, and manages the negative downside of these beliefs.

Feed Forward: suggestion for what a Leader can choose to do in the future.

Follow-Up: The process by which a Leader formally (and informally) checks in with Stakeholders. This process involves the discipline of using a list of “Do’s & Don’ts” for how to interact with Stakeholders.

Leader/Coachee: A person who has selected a Coach to help improve his/her leadership behavior.
Leader Skills for Involving Stakeholders: The set of 7 skills of: Asking; Listening; Thanking; Thinking; Responding; Changing; and Following Up with Stakeholders. Leaders learn what to avoid in using these skills and what to do to be effective.

Measurement of Results: Stakeholder-Centered Coaching® pioneered the use of measurement at the end of a coaching assignment to determine whether a Leader actually improves, as determined solely by Stakeholders, not by the Leader or the Coach.

Mini Survey: A very short anonymous survey completed by Stakeholders to determine the degree to which a Leader has improved in his/her development goal. The normal mini-survey process is conducted at the halfway mark and at the conclusion of a yearlong coaching assignment. This provides the measurement of results.

Stakeholder: Individuals chosen to assist a Leader to improve on the development goal by providing: 1) ongoing feedback; 2) ongoing feedforward; and, 3) participating in the mini-survey process to measure results. A good Stakeholder is both interdependent with the Leader (affected by the behavior the Leader is working on to improve) and interacts with the Leader (enough contact to be able to provide concrete input).

Stakeholder-Centered Coaching® (SCC): A disciplined process where a Leader chooses a development goal and relevant Stakeholders, who are recruited and used to help the Leader achieve a positive long-term change in leadership behavior.

Stakeholder-Centered Coaching® Principles: The philosophies developed over time by Marshall Goldsmith in working with top leaders form the basis of how a coaching assignment progresses toward the goal of achieving a positive, long-term change in behavior. These principles incorporate the belief set of successful people and serve as a foundation for the rigorous discipline used by the Leader.

Systems Approach: Stakeholder-Centered Coaching® uses a more systemic process to help a Leader achieve a positive long-term change in behavior than traditional coaching. This is accomplished by bringing the people who are affected by a Leader’s behavior into the process. It is the Leader’s Manager, Peers, and Direct Reports (along with the Coach) who participate in and support the change.